“ At Misfit Energy we love the people who feel that need to color outside of the lines, take different paths, show up louder, stronger, and unapologetically real, or those that quietly move through life their own way. That’s just it, the spaces we don’t fit are what is interesting. That’s your Misfit Energy. ”

Cod & Haddock Update

Every year as part of Iceland's fisheries management program they close the inshore fisheries for spawning. This is part of what makes Iceland have one of the best managed fisheries in the world. It occurs every year on the same dates, April 1st – April 21st. The actual closures are a little more complex than my explanation as they are not exactly 4 and 14 miles in every location around the island but without getting into the fine detail the closures occur as follows:

April 1st -10th there is a 4 mile closure around the entire island to allow the fish to come in and spawn

April 11th -21st this closure is extended to 14 miles around the island this allows for additional spawning and to give the juveniles an opportunity to safely get out to sea

Typically during the first 10 days of the closure there is little effect on the fisheries as long as there are no big storms but this year with the Easter Holiday in the first week of the closures we are a little more concerned about the availability starting after Easter and especially during the second half of the closures starting the 11th. This is when we will see the closure get extended to the 14 mile limit and the smaller vessels will only be able to get out in ideal weather conditions. Many of these boat owners take advantage of this time by pulling their boats out of the water and doing scheduled maintenance.

As noted above, week is Easter week and we will see just a 3 day production week in Iceland. This will not affect our fish arriving for next week but it will become an issue for the Easter weekend arrivals and the fish for the beginning of following week. Iceland will be closed on Easter Thursday, Good Friday, Easter Sunday and Easter Monday. (who knew Easter was 5 days long) Technically Saturday they could work but chances are very slim so we never count on it. We will receive fish through Thursday night and possibly a small shipment Easter weekend. No fish the following Monday night and probably nothing on Tuesday night either.

This takes us to the 8th of April and almost to the second closure. This timing of Easter is my big concern for this year. What will happen with the boats going back out after Easter? Will they go out or will many more tie up until the 22nd? Unfortunately, I feel the answer is that many more will tie up and wait until after the closure. If the weather is decent, maybe more will continue fishing but if the weather is poor I do not see any of the smaller vessels going out up until after the 22nd. This will significantly limit the supplies fish from Iceland. The good news is that our trawl boats will not be affected by the weather and are scheduled to continue to fish after the Easter holiday and straight through the closures as they can easily get out past the 14 mile zones.

In past years the prices typically creep up a little at the beginning of the closure and can have some stronger swings in the second half depending on weather. This year the pricing has already started its climb so it is hard to guess what will happen and just how high things can go, hopefully not much further.
